

Descriptive Narration TV for Low Vision People

Hollywood studios have ceased manufacturing described VHS or tape versions of films for sale and rental. WGBH continues to make media accessible via description, with efforts focused on television, feature films in theaters, DVDs and online video.

The library does have about 80 titles available on VHS with descriptive audio. The list is below.

TV and the Internet do offer programs with descriptive audio.

For example: TV cable channel "TCM" has Turner Classic Movie DVS® Showcase every Saturday evening at 9pm.

You will need a stereo TV or VCR with S.A.P. (Second Audio Program). Simply activate the S.A.P. feature on your TV or VCR (follow the manual or call the manufacturer).

Here's a guide to help you find programming:

universal symbol for video description, also referred to as audio description and descriptive narration, DVS®

universal symbol for closed captioning

Internet web access symbol, universal symbol that indicates the web site was designed with accessibility features
